From self-respect to nature defence.

The purpose of this article (paper) is to analyze the lack of ethics based on the lack of self-respect. It uses an exploring bibliographical research which has pointed out a result that may only be ethical if the citizen, in a deep relation of love and respect with himself, finds out that the other has the same importance in his survival. That is: it will only be ethical one who finds out that all men struggle for the same goal (cause): the survival of species. Finally, it emphasizes that a sign (an indicator) of the presence of ethical spirit in man begins with the environment defence, the nature defence, in his developed ability to love and teach to love, as well as in his capacity to be free and teach the freedom of choices at home, at school, in society.
